WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

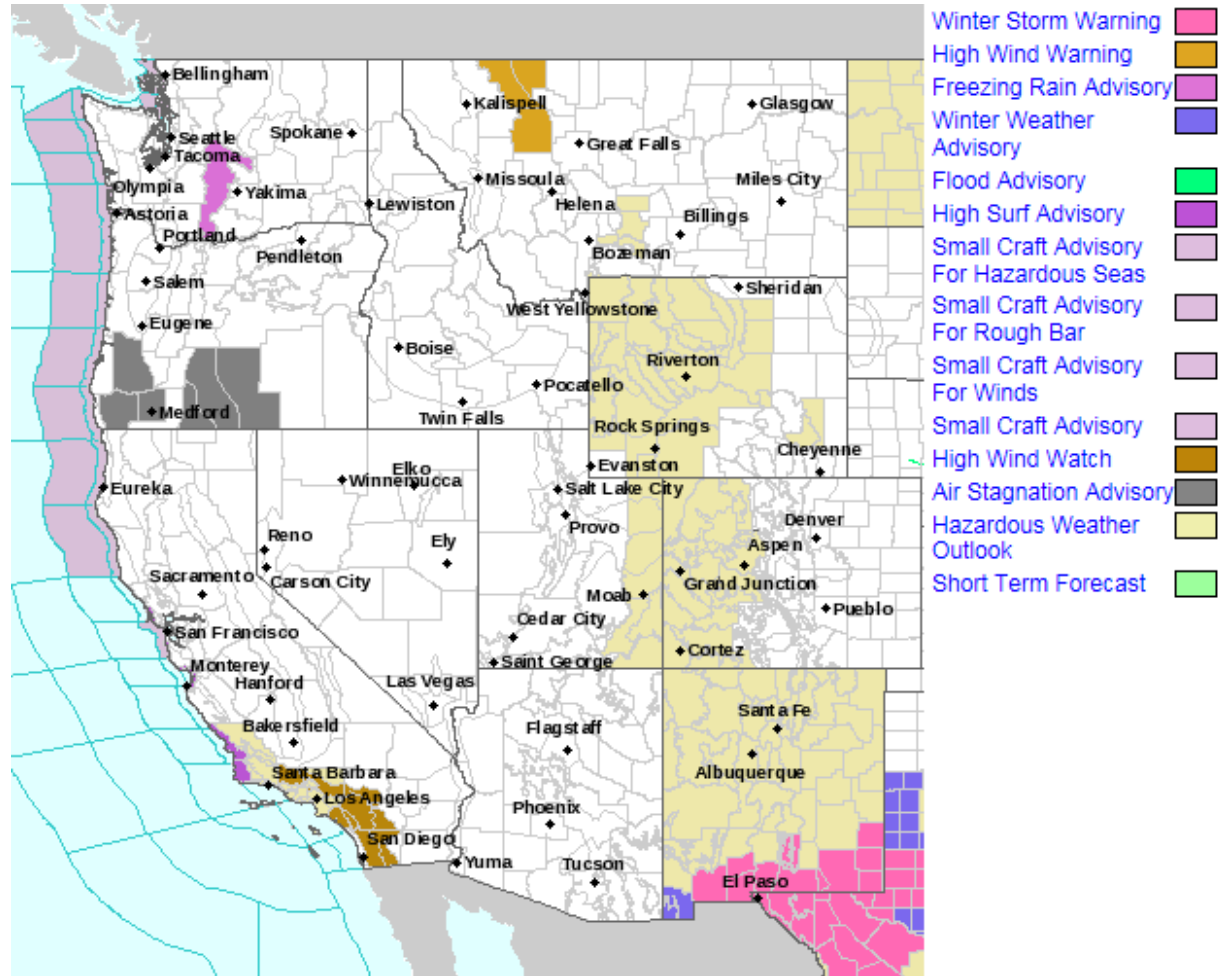

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A weak frontal system moving through the Pacific Northwest and far Northern California is producing clouds and a few isolated light rain showers. The system will be east of the area tonight as a Pacific high pressure area builds into Northern California. The high will continue to build overhead through Sunday and gradually move off to the east Monday. Temperatures will be 10-15 degrees above normal. At the surface a northeast-east/offshore wind pattern will enhance the warm and dry conditions from the lower Western Sierra slopes to the coast through early Monday. Computer models are inconsistent on the weather pattern expected throughout Northern California beyond Monday. Models show a subtropical low pressure system moving northward off the Baja coast over the weekend, and showers with high snow levels moving into Southern California Monday. The system is currently forecast to move into Northern California Tuesday, with the focus on the eastern half, followed by a frontal system moving onshore Wednesday. The forecast calls for cool, wet, and unsettled weather for all of Northern California Tuesday through Thursday, with snow levels remaining above 6000 feet.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

North to east winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will continue across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California through Friday afternoon as surface high pressure sits over the Great Basin. The offshore gradient will become very strong as low pressure forms off the Baja Coast causing north to east winds across Southern California to increase to 20 to 40 mph with gusts to 60 mph Friday night through this weekend. Temperatures will warm a couple of degrees each day through Sunday as high pressure aloft approaches and moves over Northern California. Maximum temperatures will be in the 50s across the mountains and in the upper 60s and 70s in the valleys today. Valley locations across Southern California will reach the low to mid 80s by Sunday. Minimum humidity will be in the single digits and teens away from the San Joaquin Valley and its surrounding foothills through this weekend. The area of low pressure off Baja will move northward bringing showers and significant cooling to the region Monday through the middle of next week.
